Reforest Our City

Trees save energy, reduce storm water runoff, enhance property values, improve water quality and make our neighborhoods more attractive. However, in many urban and suburban communities, tree canopies are dwindling. Some trees are lost to development while others were never planted or replaced due to municipal budget constraints. The Western Reserve Land Conservancy launched Reforest Our City to reverse the trend. They are working to plant and maintain thousands of trees along streets, in parks and in other public spaces starting in the city of Cleveland.

Due to the corporate policy of the Western Land Conservancy limiting meetings to ten people or less, our speaker, Lizzy, will present the reforestation program via zoom, which will be projected onto a screen in our barn. Members will be offered the option to come to the barn to view the program and enjoy a delicious box lunch, or join the presentation via zoom from wherever they would like.
